FACTORY LAWS HIT BERLIN

Buildings Condemned and Industries Move Away

Berlin has been hard hit as a result of the new factory laws. The people who worked in the shirt shop and laundry are all thrown out of employment by the removal of the plant to Greenwich. The pool factory is shut down, and nothing seems to be left in the town but the gladiolus fields.

The employers of the plants at Berlin, after being interviewed by the factory inspectors, decided that they would rather move their business to some other place, it is said, than try to remodel the old buildings to comply with the law. The buildings were of ancient construction, and would have to be practically built anew. The shirt shop and laundry, which are branches of a Troy concern, will be installed, it is understood, at Greenwich. What disposition will be made of the other industries is not at present known, although it is understood that operations will not again be resumed in the old buildings.

Residents of Berlin are in a quandary as to how they are going to make a living now with all the industries closed indefinitely in the village. Even those who own their homes are at a loss to figure out how they are to subsist with no work and consequently no income.

It has been suggested that the citizens club together and build a modern factory building with a view of inducing some manufacturer to locate in the village, and several other propositions have been considered in an effort to furnish employment for the people who have been used to working, and are thrifty. Berlin is considered an admirable place for manufacturing, and any employer of labor would be assured of good and reliable help at all seasons of the year. If present conditions continue it is feared Berlin real estate will depreciate in value, and many of the residents will be obliged to move away from the village and seek other fields wherein to earn a livelihood.

FACTORY ACT WORKS WELL

Working Conditions Improved By Activity of Inspector

Allen Cuthbert of Middlebury, factory inspector arrived in Montpelier Monday evening for the purpose of continuing the work in Washington county. He left there for Granville to meet some of the quarry owners relative to the operating of the quarries. He believes it is unsafe for a man to step into a hook attached to a rope and be lowered 40 to 70 feet into the quarry and has requested that this be stopped.

Owners Co-operate

He also objects to the use of the rudely constructed ladders going into the quarry and will have substituted stairs similar to those put in at other quarries. He finds that the employers are co-operating with him in doing away with the common drinking cup. He will also insist that suitable outhouses be erected at each quarry.

In speaking of the work in his department he states that the big factory owners are co-operating and see the benefit of the work. He recently received a letter from the Fairbanks Sledge company in which they ask him to make the second visit to inspect work carried out on his recommendations and finds they have gone even further than he asked them and have expended about $3000.

Appropriation Too Small

He finds as was predicted when the act became a law that the amount appropriated is too small to obtain the results desired and therefore many small concerns are not being asked to do what they should be asked because he cannot reach their places of business.

The woolen mills at Bennington are following his recommendations. On the other hand he finds that many corporations do not appreciate the full meaning of the law relative to the employment of children under 14 years of age and are working some during vacation time which he is stopping where he finds violation. The employment of women in factories has been greatly improved.
